...n Jews Hid ...h Aid Of Christians

In a communication to the British Senior Jewish Chaplain the following account of a visit to Rome was written by the Rev. M. Berman, a Jewish Chaplain with the Eighth Army:

"I have just come back to camp from Rome. I arrived there early Friday and I immediately sought out the Synagogues. It was a great relief to find the first one I looked for intact. I soon had a crowd of the local Jewish population around me and found out what I wanted to know. All the Synagogues in Rome are intact.

"As yet they are sealed off and locked up. I have already been to the appropriate authorities and have obtained permission to open the Synagogues officially. The first mass opportunity taken by the Germans when they sealed the premises and I wanted to be sure to open the doors in order to find out whether any desecration had taken place but I was entreated by some of the Jewish people there not to do so until to-morrow when it is hoped the president of the community and others may be present at the opening. The large Synagogue at one synagogues had been completely looted.

"I ascertained that the Nazis three days ago rounded up the best of the community, including the head of the Rabbis. A good part of the community still remains in Rome and I am hopeful that when the American advance upwards many Jews in hiding will emerge. It is almost certain already that 7,000 to 8,000 Jews are still [illegible] this figure may be [illegible]

250 Refugees Lost In Torpedoing

Food and supplies are being rushed by the Joint Distribution Committee's representative in the Middle East to the Turkish Black Sea port of Igneada where the Turkish motor ship Bulbul disembarked about 250 Jewish refugees. This action followed the submarine shelling seven miles off the Turko-Bulgar border of the Turkish motor ship Mafkura which was sunk. About 250 Jewish refugees from Hungary, Rumania and Poland lost their lives. The few survivors, mainly members of the Mafkura's crew, were taken aboard the Bulbul, according to word received by the J.D.C. from its European chairman, Dr. Joseph Schwartz.

Three vessels left the Rumanian escape port of Constanza last week, the third being the Marina, whose 815 refugee passengers reached Instanbul safely. The Marina's complement left Turkey for Palestine, original destination of the entire 1,000 refugees, Dr. Schwartz reported.

J.D.C.'s overseas chief indicated that Reuben Resnick, of the J.D.C. Middle East staff who has been instructed to dispatch necessity-supplies, is en route to Igneada, where, after ministering to the immediate needs of the refugees, he will arrange for their overland transportation to Palestine via Turkey. This situation is the more involved because Igneada is in a military zone.

The sinking of the Mafkura followed closely after the break of diplomatic relations between Turkey and Germany. All of the refugees had been informed [illegible]

SON IN U.S. ARMY UNITED WITH REFUGEE PARENTS

Sergt. Joseph Flink, a Polish refugee from Berlin who joined the United states Army fourteen months ago, said that he never dreamed that his parents, interned in Italy, would cross the Atlantic before he went overseas to help liberate them, but that is exactly what happened.

"Miracles are still happening—now that I hear your voice again after six years, perhaps I'll hear your sister's some day, too!" 56-year-old Naftali Flink, the sergeant's father, exclaimed in a twenty-minute telephone conversation between New York, where the soldier was home on furlough, and the Emergency Refugee Shelter in Fort Ontario, Oswego.

The elder Mr. Flink and his wife, Ryva, 53, are among the eighty-four Polish nationals in the group of 984 refugees who arrived from Naples.

Sergeant Flink, assigned to Medical Supply at the Rhoades General Army Hospital in Utica, learned his parents' whereabouts when a relative informed him their names had appeared in a list of refugee ship passengers published in a Yiddish newspaper. After checking this information with the National Refugee Service, Inc., 139 Centre Street, New York, Sergeant Flink made the first such telephone call to the new Oswego Refugee Shelter. It took him four hours to get the call through. Speaking from his home, 829 Riverside Drive, the sergeant said in German:

"Papa, because I hear your voice, now I believe this is true!"

The Flinks told their son that after nearly four years in Fascist concentration camps they now were well and happy. They live in former Army barracks, equipped with GI furniture; eat in a common mess hall and are forbidden by regulations to leave the eighty-acre fort area. Yet, they "feel free," their son reported.

He expects to visit them as soon as possible, taking gifts of clothing, toilet articles and a radio.

After forty years in Berlin, Mr. and Mrs. Flink, who were born in Poland, fled to Genoa in 1940. A Nazi pogrom had wrecked their home and wholesale shoe business. When Mr. Flink proudly exhibited a Swiss newspaper photograph of their son Morris, 30, with a Polish regiment fighting against the Nazis in France early in the war the couple was interned in a series of Fascist concentration camps. Food and clothing were scarce, they told the Sergeant, but they suffered no ill-treatment from the Italians.

Morris is now interned in Switzerland. Another son, Sholem, 32, was killed by the Nazis in Berlin in 1942. Their daughter, Mrs. Fanny Frank, her husband and two children, are believed to be "somewhere in Belgium."

Sergeant Flink, who escaped to the United States in 1938 with his wife, Sylvia, owner of a Broadway millinery shop, was drafted into the Army three months before he became 38. On Dec. 4, 1943, he became a United States citizen in a Syracuse naturalization court.

J.D.C. To Help Move Children From Balkans

As part of a large-scale program in behalf of the Jews in the Balkans special measures are being taken by the agencies of the United Jewish Appeal for Refugees, Overseas Needs and Palestine to save as many as possible of the 400,000 Jews remaining in Hungary.

Immediately following the announcement by the Horthy Government that it would allow all children under ten to leave the country and that adults would be permitted to go to Palestine if entry visas could be provided for them, the Joint Distribution Committee, and the United Palestine Appeal ordered their representatives in Turkey to proceed with the evacuation and transportation of as many Jews as could be brought out of Hungary and removed from the reach of Nazi extermination squads.

Working in close cooperation with the President's War Refugee Board, the United Jewish Appeal agencies are giving prior consideration to the Hungarian situation to save thousands of Jews from deportation to Nazi extermination centers where some 400,000 Jews from Hungary are reported to have perished during the past month. The Joint Distribution Committee has undertaken to pay for the transportation of both children and adults who can leave Hungary. To speed the adjust-

U. S. Greeting To Refugees Is Kindly

A hope for renewed strength and faith with which to face a future "in which the dignity of the individual man will be recognized and assured everywhere" was expressed to 982 European refugees, who were picked up in concentration camps on the fringes of combat in Italy, by Secretary Harold L. Ickes.

His message to the group which arrived at the Fort Ontario emergency shelter, was read by Dillon S. Meyer, national director of the War Relocation Authority, at a ceremony in which interested Oswego residents participated, also said:

"On behalf of the United States Government, I extend to you a hearty welcome for the duration of the war, or until you can be safely returned to your homelands across the sea.

"I hope that this haven from the intolerance, suffering and persecution that you have undergone will in some measure ease your tragic memories.

"The United States has become a great republic and a strong democracy through the intermingling of all races and creeds. Let me assure you that we shall endeavor to make your sojourn at the Oswego shelter as comfortable as it is possible to make it, and be glad, we publish your [illegible] tion."

Report Says Einstein Rejects

A story that Leon Blum, former People's Front Premier of France, was forced to help build a gallows upon which he was then hanged reached Moscow from Lublin, Poland— once notorious Nazi death factory.

Circumstantial evidence that Blum met his death in 1943 in a German concentration camp near Lublin, Poland, was published in the army newspaper Red Star in an article by Konstantin Simonoff, one of the Soviet Union's ace war correspondents, and top-flight playwrights.

Well-informed sources in London told The United Press that M. Blum was alive "just a few days ago, but declined to elaborate on the basis of their information for "obvious reasons," adding that "the less said about the matter the better." Reuter quoted Andre le Troquer, French Commissioner for the Administration of Liberated Territories, as saying it was known that M. Blum was alive in May, 1943, given in the Moscow report as the date of his death.

Describing the "extermination camp," with a capacity of 40,000 prisoners, whose witnesses and official German records indicated the extinction of "several hundred thousand persons," Mr. Simonoff recounted this incident, as told to him by a Russian, Peter M. Danilaff, and a Pole, Kharki Blinsky, two Lublin engineers who had been hired as civilian construction experts working at the camp:

"In 1943 they put a Jew whom they both knew. He was a prisoner in the camp and among a group of prisoners hauling timber. He approached them and said: 'Do you know who that old man is— he is Leon Blum.'

"On seeing that no SS men were near by, they approached the old man and the following conversation took place:

"'Are you Leon Blum?' Danilaff asked.

"'Yes, I am Leon Blum,' the old man answered.

"'The Prime Minister of France?'

"'Yes, the Prime Minister of France.'

"'How did you get here?'

"'I was in the last group of French prisoners.'

"'Why didn't you try to escape when still in France? Couldn't you get away?'

"'I don't know,' said Leon Blum, 'you're talking to [illegible] maybe I could have, but I decided to share the fate of my people.'

"Some SS men appeared at this time and Blum, together with other prisoners, quickly [illegible]

BETTER HEARING FOR BETTER LIVING

No class of handicapped persons has been so consistently exploited as the HARD OF HEARING.

The ancient Romans regarded the deaf as beyond help and deprived them of civil and legal rights. Aristotle called them "senseless". The Spartans solved the problem by killing them with little ado. Today, many are at the mercy of high pressure salesmen who take their money for inadequate and often useless "gadgets".

When our eyesight fails, we consult an experienced oculist; when our teeth show signs of decay, we seek advice and treatment from a trained dentist. Surely our ears and hearing demand the same careful and experienced attention.

If we have defective hearing which cannot be remedied by medical treatment, it is our duty to consult a trained and experienced specialist in the finest Hearing Aids modern science has produced. He will make an audiometric chart of our individual loss (varying in each one of us), which will enable him to prescribe and demonstrate the particular instrument suitable to our own personal case.

This without cost or any obligation whatsoever.

At the offices of MEDICAL ACOUSTICS whose LIFE LONG personal service, by an efficient staff, is always at the disposal of the hard of hearing.

MARRIAGES

LEVIN-WASSERMAN

The marriage of Sylvia Calla, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. Wasserman, 261 McEachran Avenue, Montreal, to Corporal Joseph Levin, United States Army Air Corps, son of Mrs. A. Levin, of Bellingham, Washington, Oregon, and the late Mr. Levin, took place at Fifth Ellis Chaim Synagogue, in Brooklyn, N. Y., at six o'clock, on June 16, Rev. L. Block, uncle of the groom, officiating. The bride, who was given in marriage by her parents, wore white floor-length gown of brocaded marquisette de soie, fashioned with a high neckline with off-the-shoulder ruffle effect, and long sleeves coming to points over the wrists. Fitted bodice and a bouffant skirt ending in a three-yard train. Her fingertip-length veil of white tulle illusion was caught by a band of white sequins with which matching sequined all-lilies-of-the-valley were also used, and she carried a cascade bouquet of Calla lilies and lilies-of-the-valley tied to the bouquet. Miss Ida Wasserman, sister of the bride, was maid of honour in a gown of pink embroidered organdie with deepened pink [illegible] and a corsage of Briarcliffe roses. With Mrs. Levin, mother of the groom, in a gown of [illegible] chiffon, matching shoulder-length veil caught with Briarcliffe roses, and a corsage of the same roses. The bridal couple spent their honeymoon in Asheville, South Carolina, the bride travelling in a British tan [illegible] suit, with corsage of white orchids. They are living at 80 [illegible] Avenue, Charleston. Mrs. Dolores Wilner, cousin of the bride, of Portland, Maine, was wedding guest.

Index To Seek Refugees

As a channel through which seven organizations will seek to locate persons who have been displaced by war whose whereabouts are unknown, the Central Location Index, Inc., has been established in New York, it was announced by Moses A. Leavitt, president of the agency.

Mr. Leavitt said the Index would serve as a clearance for clearance of the names of hundreds of thousands of persons who are being sought by relatives and friends in this country.

The extensive overseas facilities of the member agencies, International Red Cross and of public and semi-public bodies, he said, would be enlisted in the location of displaced persons as rapidly as changing conditions permit.

Persons desiring to apply for location service may do so through the member organizations in New York:

American Committee for Christian Refugees, 180 Center Street.
American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, 270 Madison Avenue.
Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, 425 Lafayette Street.
International Migration Service, 122 East Twenty-second Street.
National Council of Jewish Women, 1819 Broadway.
National Refugee Service, Inc., 180 Center Street; and American Friends Service Committee, 20 South Twelfth Street, Philadelphia.

Berlin's Show Earns $10,0 00, 000 For Army Relief

Irving Berlin, composer and producer of "This Is the Army," reported after returning to New York from four months of performances with the show before British and American troops in Italy, that the show plus the movie had earned $10,000,000 for the Army Emergency Relief Fund and probably would bring in $2,000,000 more before it was through.

Berlin, who gave "Yip, Yip, Yaphank," to the men of the World War, and "This Is the Army" to the men fighting today's battles, described his recent four-months' tour with "This Is the Army," in Italy, and in a high, clear voice presented the humorous prologue of his new show, which was a skit in which two [illegible] soldiers pretended to be [illegible] and Mrs. Louis Lazarus, 4861 Van Horne Avenue, announce the engagement of their daughter, Ruth, to Sam Lewis, son of Mrs. Lewis, 5145 Clanranald Avenue, and the late Mr. Lewis, the marriage to take place on August 27. Miss Hersh is a graduate of MacDonald College School For Teachers.

engrossed playing one foot gently back and forth, and tapped the other in rhythm to the song which wowed the boys in Italy:

"There are no wings on a fox hole
If it's where you happen to be
While the shells are flying.
It's doing or dying
For the men of the Infantry.
There are no wheels on your footsies
When you march from night till the dawn,
Twenty miles of liking
Is not to your liking,
But the foot soldier marches on.
From the night till the dawn
The foot soldier marches on.
There's a sharp end on your rifle
When you're close to your enemy
At that close-up meeting
There is no retreating
For the men of the Infantry."

"It's not really suited to my high soprano," Mr. Berlin apologized, "but the boys liked it. I introduced it at the Royal Opera House in Rome, where "This Is the Army" was extremely proud to play, and the other day I gave the song to General George C. Marshall (Army chief of staff) for the infantry."

Any proceeds from general publication of the song, Mr. Berlin said, will be given to "some fund that has something to do with the infantry."

With a cast reduced to about 100 men, "This Is the Army" opened in Naples on April 5, Mr. Berlin said. In the next four months they played engagements in Santa Maria, near the Anzio beachhead; a large medical center; Rome, Foggia and Bari. In addition to appearing in two shows daily, Mr. Berlin also visited about thirty-five base, field and general hospitals, where he sang informally, and with three members of the cast gave a show aboard two battleships.

One of the highlights of the tour, Mr. Berlin said, was a performance in Santa Maria which was interrupted by a blackout. The several hundred soldiers on explicit guns from Anzio, he reall theatres of operations, and the cast is already on its way to another area. Mr. Berlin, who arrived in the United States on July 4th, will remain for a short time to settle some personal affairs, and will then rejoin the cast, says the New York Herald Tribune.

"I'm terribly tired," he said. "But I don't want to sound heroic—I'm not as tired as a lot of the guys who are still over there."

EX-SOLDIERS PREFER MINES TO POLISH ARMY BIAS

Twenty-one Polish-Jewish soldiers and three officers, who were sentenced to prison last winter for deserting the Polish armed forces and later were pardoned, have gone to work in the British coal mines.

The soldiers and sailors deserted as a result of alleged anti-Semitism in the Polish armed forces. They first sought to be transferred to the British armed forces, but when this was denied to them by the British, they all volunteered for work in the coal mines, which they felt was the best war work they could perform against the common enemy.

U.S. GREETING

tary of the Interior, Mr. Myer added:

"To you who with courage have come a long, dark way, I want to express the deeply felt goodwill of all Americans."

Joseph H. Spaert, director of the center, said:

"I assure you that while you are at Fort Ontario there will be a minimum of supervision and that you will be able to live your own lives with as great freedom as the physical facilities permit. Your privacy will be respected. Whenever there is a knock at your door, it will be a friendly one."

The shelter, the only one of its kind in this country, is under the jurisdiction of the War Relocation Authority.

Two Army harbor boats had transferred the refugees to Hoboken, where two special trains were waiting for the [illegible] hospital cars. The rest of the refugees walked the 800 yards or so.

Many of them were rabbinically bearded, all were nondescript clothes, and there was hardly a pair of stockings among all the hundreds of women. Everybody carried a bundle or a battered portmanteau. Some of the children clasped well-worn dolls. The eyes of all of them, even the oldest, blinked as they set foot ashore.

The family heads among them included 154 Austrians, 146 Yugoslavians, eighty-four Poles, sixty-one Germans, twenty-one Czechs, four each from Danzig, Rumania and Turkey; three each from Bulgaria and Hungary; two from Greece and two from Spain and one from France. In age they ranged from three weeks to eighty years.

The youngest of the lot, known to convalescent soldiers aboard the troopship as "International Harry," was Harry Mangay, three weeks old, the son of Leon and Olga Mangay. The baby's father is a Pole and his mother, a Czechoslovakian. He was born in an American Army ambulance on the way to the pier in the Italian port from which the ship sailed.

Among them were not only unfortunates who had incurred the animosity of the Nazis through accident or the malice of neighbors, but a few who had taken active part in guerrilla or underground warfare. Matilda Mach, a Czech, fifty years old, helped 100 refugees across the border from Yugoslavia.

Hanus Goldberger, a Czech, forty-seven years old, set out on a Danube River boat with his wife to escape the Germans, hoping to make their way to Palestine. The boat descended the Danube safely, navigated the Black Sea and the Dardanelles and was wrecked in the Aegean.

Moses Tauchovsi, thirty-seven years old, was an Antwerp rabbi, a director of the Yeshive, a religious seminary near Antwerp, and had got as far as Italy with his wife when the Germans intercepted him.

They hail some from all parts of Europe to end up in a dismal concentration camp in Italy, and many of them have had hairbreadth escapes from death.

Dr. Rafael Margulis, 58, formerly a lieutenant colonel in the Jugoslav Medical Corps, arrived with his wife and two sons. He was in Sibenik when Jugoslavia capitulated. He threw away his uniform and made his way over the mountains into Albania, but later went back to get his wife and the children and [illegible]. During the period when the Nazis, short of aid, declared liberty for all Jugoslav medical officers, he escaped with his family.

A tale of death was narrated by Serafina Fuksman, who came with her son, Milan, 9. They lived in a little town near Zagreb. First her husband was killed. Then she went to live with her father, mother and brother, but the Ustachi, a Croat organization established by the Nazis, killed her parents and brother. She escaped with her son while the marines were in progress. Later she married a lawyer and he, mistaken for a Ustachi, was slain by the Partisans. He succeeded, they took her and the boy with them just before the arrival of the Germans.

Religion After The War

By Rabbi Dr. I. I. Mattuck, of London, England

The fact is that religion and religious institutions can't be separated. The belief in God requires synagogues and churches. That becomes obvious when we recognise their true character. They are societies based on common faith expressed in corporate worship. They are needed to help individuals maintain their individual faith in God by mutual support. They are needed also to show and maintain the special character of religion. Religion is the possession of individuals but it is also a bond of human fellowship. It dwells in the spirit of men, but to be complete it must also be the life of a community.

The Jews show conspicuously the social nature of religion. Judaism is the religion of individuals; it has been, and is, the life of a people. It could not be one without being the other; it could endure in the lives of individuals without a community to unite them, it cannot give life to the Jewish people without having an effective place in the lives of Jews.

Religious institutions have, however, lost largely, if not completely, the quality of religious societies. The spirit of religious fellowship has gone out of them. A congregation is often merely a temporary agglomeration of individuals who have come together for worship. The individuals constituting it worship individually; they do not, in their worship, identify themselves with one another to make a society dominated by a common faith in God and moved by the common needs of humanity.

Much of the responsibility for this situation must be put on the forms of worship. They are dominated by too much tradition. It is one of the arguments for traditional forms of worship that they maintain the corporate life and character of a religious community. That was a valid argument when the authority of tradition was generally accepted. The opposite is the case now; the authority of tradition is generally rejected. The effect of merely traditional forms is, therefore, to separate worship from life. The forms of worship must be living to serve an effective religious society. One remedy, therefore, for indifference to churches and synagogues among those who believe in God is for them the churches and synagogues to [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] some young people say they want more traditionalism. It would, however, be unwise to accept their attitude as conclusive evidence. For a number of reasons. One is that they may be more vocal while others may be more numerous.

But the prevailing indifference to worship must be attributed in considerable measure to the fact that it has lost its social quality and stimulus. The remedy lies with those who are now attached to synagogues and churches. They have to cultivate in themselves the feelings of religious fellowship and fulfil the practical obligations which it imposes. In other words, it is up to them to build up vigorous religious societies in which others will find the warmth of fellowship in faith in God. In this way they can draw in those who are now interested in God but not in worship. Even if they are only seekers after God, they will be helped to find him in the fellowship of those who believe in him.

Just see what such a fellowship would mean to the men whose faith has been stimulated by their experience in the war, when they return to their normal lives. It is the way to help them, and, at the same time, to canalise for the benefit of the whole nation their spiritual power and aspirations. Much thought is being given—and rightly so—to ways of establishing them in the economic life of the nation. Surely equal thought should be given to their place in its spiritual life.

The conclusion of the matter is that religious institutions must make a new beginning. They urge reconstruction in the political, social, economic, and international fields; they themselves also need reconstruction. The proof of that is in the very fact that many who turn towards God, yet turn away from them. But what are religious institutions, synagogues and churches? Not just buildings. They consist of the people who belong to them. The task of religious reconstruction lies on them. Will they fulfil it? Upon the answer to that question will depend the fate of religion after the war.

leg and they moved off. After a few steps he fell down, but the other prisoners assisted him to his feet. He again picked up the log and moved off.

"The two engineers were in the camp's supply room a few weeks later and they again met their Jewish acquaintance. They asked him where Leon Blum was. The man pointed up to the sky, and said 'There I'll be shortly.'"

M. Blum, who would have been 71 years old in 1943, was reported by the Germans on April 4 of that year to have been moved to Germany from the Buchenwald internment camp in France along with former Premier Edouard Daladier and Maurice-Gustave Gamelin, former Allied Commander-in-Chief. Earlier the German Government allegedly had "received information that the British and American Governments were projecting attempts to release certain persons formerly residing in France with the object of forming a counter-[illegible] to Mr. Stoessel's article the Germans started building the Lublin concentration camp, informally called "Vernichtungslager," meaning "extermination camp," to "execute the greatest possible number of prisoners in the easiest, simplest and quickest manner." There, he said, the Germans executed Jews from all over Europe in "enormous numbers"—Russians, Ukrainians and Poles and additional thousands of Frenchmen, Italians, Netherlanders, Greeks, Belgians, Serbians, Hungarians, Rumanians, Turks, Norwegians, Swiss and even Chinese.

Red Star illustrated the article with pictures of a series of huge furnaces where the victims allegedly were cremated, and there were additional pictures of the bones of other persons who had died of starvation or disease or had been executed.

Mr. Stoessoff said final figures on the number of persons executed in Lublin camp would be established later. He added, however, that when the Red Army liberated the town there were only "a few hundred [illegible]

Nations Asked To Open Free Ports

Appeals to the governments of Great Britain, the United States and other nations to establish free ports where Jews from Hungary and other Axis-dominated countries may find a temporary haven were made by speakers at the National Conference to Save the Jewish People of Europe, at the Commodore Hotel in New York, sponsored by the Emergency Committe to Save the Jewish People of Europe.

One of the more pressing issues at the meeting was the recent offer by the Hungarian government to permit Jews to emigrate from that country, provided other nations were willing to receive them.

Gabriel A. Wechsler, national secretary of the committee, said that thus far the United States has opened one free port, at Fort Ontario, Oswego, N. Y., where 984 refugees arrived. Mexico, he said, has announced it will open a similar rescue camp, but up to now there has been no response from the British government concerning the establishment of such camps in Palestine.

Carlos Davila, former Rumanian Minister to the United States, said that the fate of European Jews cannot be divorced from the fate of all democracy.

"If a democratic revolution takes place in all European countries, there will be no more discrimination than there is in the United States," he said. "Social discrimination may continue for a while, but there, as here, the spreading of real democracy will gradually wipe out racial and religious differences.

"I consider it a point of honor for the democrats in my country not only to restore to the Jews all civil, economic and political rights but to see to it that they will be indemnified for all their losses, and that the responsible perpetrators will be punished. But this must be done by ourselves, the Rumanian people, as a debt of honor to our Jewish brethren."

Dean Alfange, co-chairman of the committee, in appealing to Great Britain for action, said that since the Jews sought only temporary shelter in Palestine and were not in the present circumstances seeking admittance as immigrants, Britain could have no excuse for refusing to admit them.

EINSTEIN REJECTS

said he took the action with great reluctance but that the work is "generally unreliable."

The book was published on July 22 by Doubleday, Doran and already is receiving favorable reviews as a "family's-eye view of genius."

Over the telephone, Professor Einstein, speaking through his secretary, said he has not seen the book as a whole, but only sections of it. These sections, he said, however, "are not true at all."

Mr. Marianoff, Professor Einstein said, is not competent to write a biography of a mathematical physicist, does not have the mental capacity to write such a work, not being a mathematician, and had no moral right to publish it.

"He is represented as the husband of my daughter, Margot," the scientist said. "Actually, they were divorced in 1937 and had not been living together for a year before that time.

"He is said to have lived with the Einstein family for eight years. He never lived at my house for even a year, only for a few months at a time."

Professor Einstein shrinks from publicity or notoriety, although he emerged from obscurity to become one of the best-known scientists of his time. He explained that he disliked to speak publicly about the book. Other biographies have been published and, although he wishes there had been none, he said nothing about them, feeling that he could not. But when a biography purports to come from his own household and does not, he said, he felt obliged to correct misinformed statements about its origin and character.

"The work is wholly unauthorized," he said. "Mr. Marianoff has given me a written promise not to publish it. Miss Wayne visited me once, seeking information for the book, and I obtained from her an oral promise not to do anything more about it."

Professor Einstein added, "I cannot understand how so reputable a publishing house as Doubleday, Doran could have gone ahead with it."

A member of the faculty of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, N. J., Professor Einstein is now on vacation. His daughter, Mrs. Margot Marianoff, an artist, obtained a divorce from Mr. Marianoff in 1937 in Trenton, N. J., on grounds of desertion after she had testified that her husband, a writer, had informed her in August, 1934, that he could not support her.

The daughter also testified that Mr. Marianoff married her in Berlin in 1930 and deserted her in August, 1934, after telling her he could not support her. She added that, at a meeting in May, 1937, he again refused support. Professor Einstein and his secretary, Miss Helene Dukas, testified at the proceedings, the scientist telling of inviting his son-in-law to Princeton for a conference after his daughter's meeting with her husband.

J.D.C. TO HELP

ment of those who will be brought to the Jewish homeland, the United Palestine Appeal, through the Jewish Agency for Palestine, is enlarging its reception facilities and preparing shelter and relief for the newcomers.

Removal of large numbers of Jewish children from the Balkans is part of a plan undertaken by the President's War Refugee Board to rescue 5,000 children from that area. The agencies of the United Jewish Appeal are prepared to make their financial resources available to the War Refugee Board for the realization of this plan.

Developments in the Balkans in recent weeks had greatly increased the responsibilities of the agencies of the United Jewish Appeal which has announced that the $32,000,000 quota for 1944 will be adequate to meet only the minimum requirements of the Joint Distribution Committee, the United Palestine Appeal, and the National Refugee Service, and that additional funds will be needed to meet enlarged opportunities for mass rescue effort.

ROME JEWS

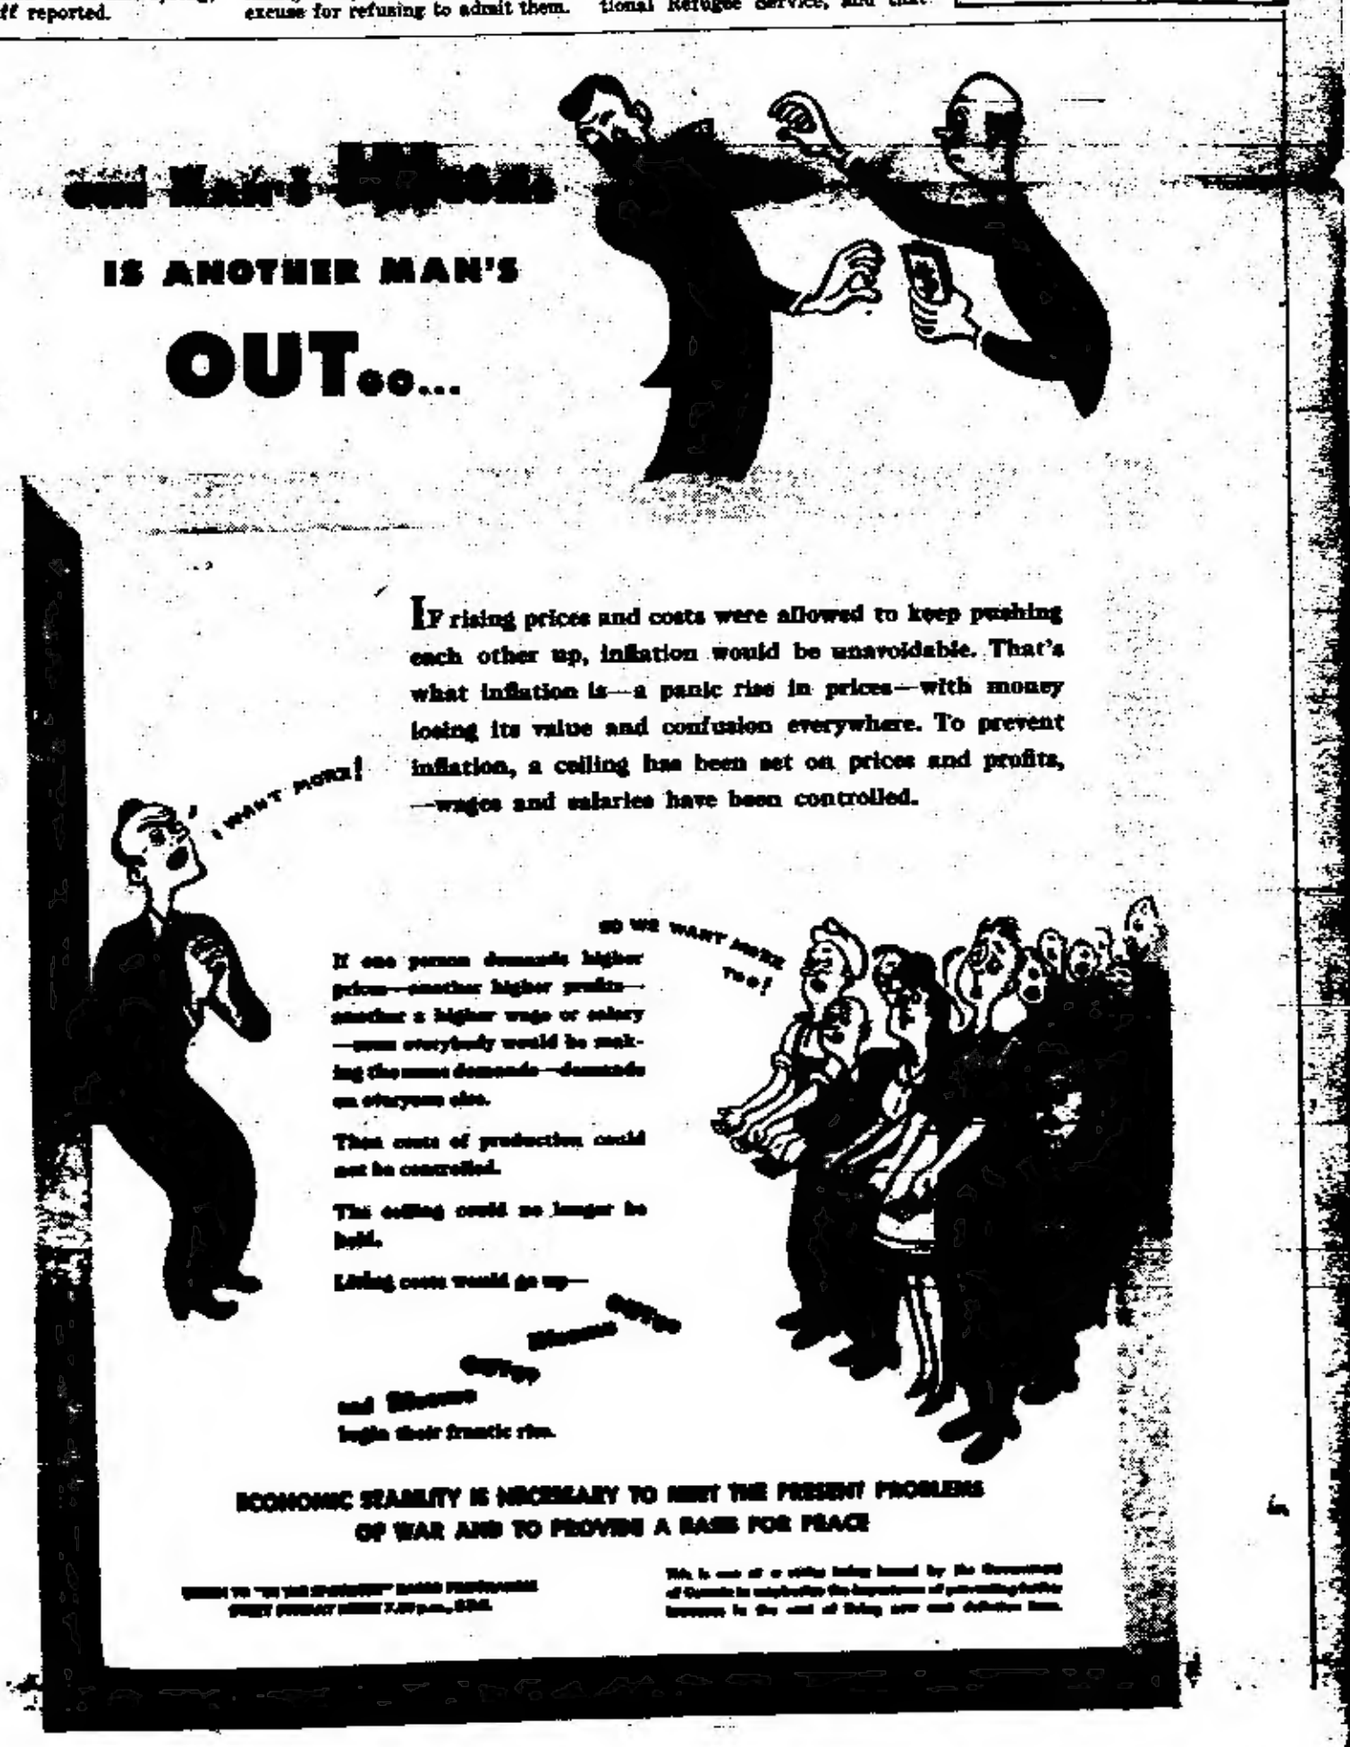
Italians were very kind and helpful to our people, and particular mention was made of the assistance given in various ways by the Christian clergymen. Rome appears to be undamaged and the reconstruction of the Jewish community will be as difficult as anticipated. Within a short time I hope the Synagogues will be open, the schools functioning, and the whole machinery of communal organisation working smoothly so, that we may go on to liberate communities further North in our rapid advance. It was the greatest privilege of my life to be the first Jewish Chaplain to enter Rome and thus help in the revival of one of our most ancient communities."

A Jewish guerrilla unit derailed trains on the Vilna-Sarny line carrying German soldiers, officers and ammunition.

SAVED 39 U. S. SHIPMATES, GETS D.S.M.

For displaying "resourcefulness and ingenuity" that resulted in saving the lives of thirty-nine shipmates adrift in a lifeboat in the Arabian Sea, Junior Engineer Arthur J. Drechsler of 19-01 Murray Street, Whitestone, Queens, N. Y., received the Merchant Marine Distinguished Service Medal. The presentation was made by Rear Admiral Albert E. Randall, USNR (retired), commandant of the United States Maritime Service, in the USMS Center, 30 West Forty-fourth Street.

Mr. Drechsler's vessel, the Richard Hovey, was torpedoed by an enemy submarine, which subsequently strafed the lifeboat with machine-gun fire, wounding some survivors and puncturing all but one of the fresh-water tanks. The engineer improvised a still which produced eleven ounces of potable water a man throughout the sixteen days before rescue.



...and Hank's Inflation
IS ANOTHER MAN'S OUT...
I WANT MORE!
IF rising prices and costs were allowed to keep pushing each other up, inflation would be unavoidable. That's what inflation is—a panic rise in prices—with money losing its value and confusion everywhere. To prevent inflation, a ceiling has been set on prices and profits, —wages and salaries have been controlled.
If one person demands higher prices—another higher profits—another a higher wage or salary—soon everybody would be making the same demands—demands on everyone else.
SO WE WANT MORE TOO!
These costs of production could not be controlled.
The ceiling could no longer be held.
Living costs would go up—and begin their frantic rise.
